CONDITIONS OF ACCEPTANCE TO THE MEDICAL SCHOLARS PROGRAM - last year

Acceptance into the Medical Scholars Program at the University of Miami represents a significant commitment by the School of Medicine to each accepted student that goes far beyond simply insuring that a place will be available when the student qualifies for promotion to the first year medical class. In recognition of this commitment, the School of Medicine has imposed the following conditions on all acceptances to the Medical Scholars Program.

1. If you accept our offer of admission to the Medical Scholars Program at the University of Miami, you may not apply to any other LCME-accredited medical schools without the written consent of the associate dean for admissions. If you accept our offer and then decide to apply to other LCME-accredited medical schools, we will rescind our offer of admission to the first year medical class that was provisionally granted to you and treat you as a regular applicant to the medical class.

2. You must clearly understand that AMCAS already has been informed that the Medical Scholars Program and the Honors Program in Medicine at the University of Miami are “restricted” programs. As a consequence of this “restricted” status, AMCAS will not permit you to apply to any other medical school without the written consent of the associate dean for admissions at the University of Miami School of Medicine.

3. Deferments (delayed entry) will not be granted to students in the Medical Scholars Program for any reason. It is assumed that you wish to start medical school one year earlier than usual or you would not be applying to the Medical Scholars Program. If you are even remotely uncertain as to your readiness or preparedness to start medical school after the one additional academic year following your acceptance, you should not accept the offer of admission. On the other hand, if you are accepted to the Medical Scholars Program and then decide for whatever reason to delay your entry, then the School of Medicine will rescind its provisional offer of admission granted to you as a member of the Medical Scholars Program and you may subsequently apply as a regular applicant.
